

Philosophy of Education

I believe that every child can learn no matter their background, skill level or history. I believe that a teacher is an artist whose canvas is the human mind and spirit and that molding a child is one of the greatest responsibilities I could undertake. I believe that all children not only can learn, but have a desire to learn and my job as a teacher will be to find out how to bring that trait to the surface. I believe that through good classroom management and focusing on positive reinforcement instead of punishment children can have a positive self-view and a stronger desire to perform to their fullest potential.

As humans we are constantly learning and it is something that does not stop until life stops. I believe that all children are the same, and it just takes some longer to get from point A to point B. As a teacher it is my responsibility to differentiate my instruction so as to bring all students to the finish line in their own way, but with the same end result: newfound knowledge. I am a very strong believer that language acquisition and comprehension lead to success in life and I actively promote vocabulary building in my class. I not only want to nurture the knowledge my students gain, but I want to foster an environment where mind, soul, and body are encouraged to be better.
